A semi-transparent yellow rectangle (Multiply effect) may be applied over the image to highlight specific areas within a photograph, or to create emphasis and enhance the overall visual composition. This focus frame is most effective on portrait photography and exterior images with minimal detail, helping to establish visual hierarchy, brand consistency, and a clean editorial aesthetic.

A rectangular serves as a distinctive brand element and is applied to cover images, chapter introductions, banners, and advertising materials.

Image Segmentation /

Photographs may be segmented into vertical sections aligned with the layout grid. This treatment creates visual interest, reinforces the brand identity, and adds structure to compositions. It can be applied across print and digital materials where it contributes to a strong visual impact.

Segments should follow the underlying grid structure and must not compromise the readability or recognizability of the main subject.

Why the IEDC Executive MBA?

Transformational learning: International business cases, simulations, consulting projects, experiential learning, executive coaching, leadership assessments, and arts-based learning.

Flexible blended format: Nearly one-fifth of the programme is delivered online, with live virtual classes, providing greater flexibility while reducing time away from work.

Why IEDC?

For four decades, executives from around the world have chosen IEDC-Bled School of Management because leadership cannot be learned from textbooks alone. It is developed through experience, reflection, challenge, and meaningful interaction with exceptional faculty and peers.

Whether you lead a business unit, manage a growing company, run your own business, or aspire to executive leadership, the programme provides the knowledge, confidence, and international network to accelerate your impact.

Learning by Doing

Leadership develops through experience. Participants apply learning immediately through consulting projects, company challenges, business simulations, and integrated assignments. The Integrated Consulting Project enables participants to solve a strategic challenge for an organization while working alongside an international team of experienced executives.

Join a Global Community

When you become part of IEDC, you join an international network of executives, entrepreneurs, and business leaders who continue learning and supporting one another long after graduation. The relationships developed during the program often become lifelong professional partnerships and friendships.

Outcomes

After completing the Executive MBA you will be able to think strategically in uncertain environments, lead organizational transformation, make better financial and investment decisions, understand the business implications of Artificial Intelligence, inspire and lead high-performing teams, influence stakeholders with confidence, solve complex business challenges, expand your international network and become a more authentic and impactful leader.

International faculty: Learn from distinguished professors from leading global business schools, complemented by experienced executives and industry experts.

Leadership at the core: Leadership development is integrated throughout the program through coaching, reflection, feedback, and experiential learning.

AI across the curriculum: Artificial Intelligence has a tremendous impact on businesses in all industries. Participants explore how AI transforms strategy, finance, marketing, operations, innovation, and decision-making across every business discipline.

IEDC has a close relationship with the business community

IEDC became a pioneer in the region in 1991 when it introduced high level integrated consultancy projects into the Executive MBA curriculum. In small groups and in close co-operation with senior management and/or board representatives, Executive MBA participants work on a specific strategic management challenge with a client: local or multinational business or not-for-profit organization. These projects last one year and give our Executive MBA participants an opportunity to blend knowledge from management theory with best practice to help clients address the challenge in hand. Local and international business leaders also contribute to the IEDC Executive MBA curriculum with scheduled guest lectures.

Many IEDC alumni told me, the EMBA will change my life completely – and they were absolutely right. EMBA is more about the chance to make your life better, to improve yourself, to become the best version of yourself, to get to know yourself better.

— Kathrin Mihalus Danovski
Area Vice President
Switzerland/Austria/CEE, Germany
EMBA 2015-2016

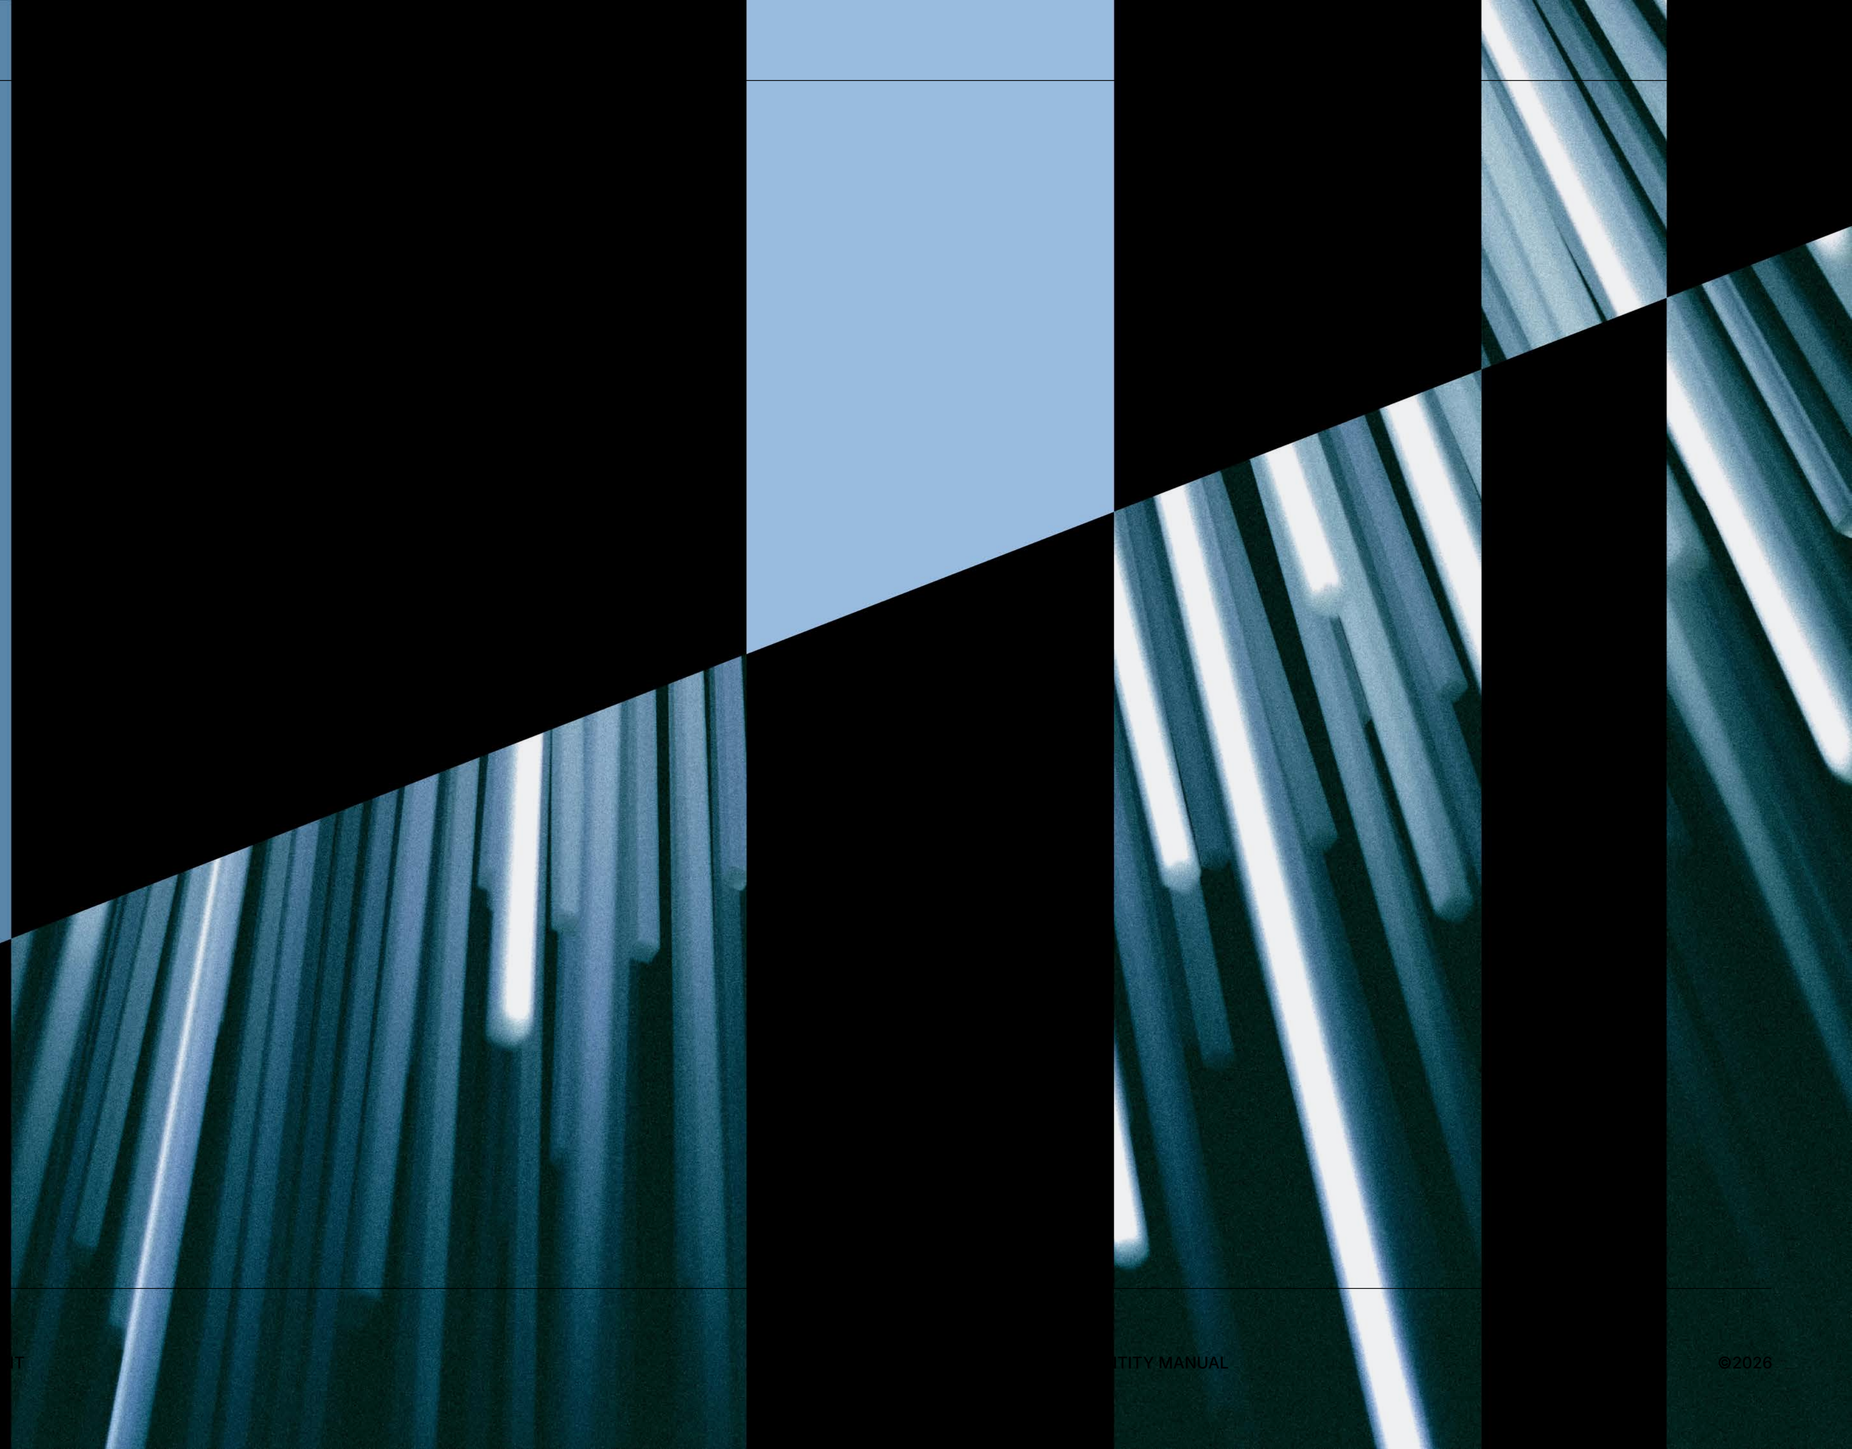

"The most important aspect for me was the fact that here in Bled, we have onsite classes. And this was, let's say, the strongest argument for me to choose Bled. Why? Because this experience that you have inside the class, together with all the other people with different backgrounds, different experiences, and different characters – you will never have it online, when you are in front of the computer all the time but maybe also doing something else. So the focus and the experience – it's something that you will feel only if you are here."
